It is a grayish-white microcrystalline powder. It is slightly alkaline in reaction, and in the dry form quite stable; on heating, however, to 205 C. it turns brown, and at 207 C. melts and decomposes. Adrenalin is insoluble in alcohol or ether; sparingly soluble in cold, more soluble in hot water. It dissolve readily in dilute acids or fixed alkali hydroxides. Adrenalin has a slightly bitter taste and a temporarily benumbing effect upon the tongue. Solutions of Adrenalin for practical use are best made by the agency of the chloride; that is to say, Adrenalin Chloride is first formed by union of the crystals with hydrochloric acid, and then a normal solution of sodium chloride in water is added in vacuo. On prolonged exposure to the air, the aqueous solution is oxidized, becoming pink, then red, and eventually brown. When the last change in color occurs, the Adrenalin has lost its characteristic physiologic properties. In the vial, protected from air and light, the solution remains practically unchanged for many months. We market Adrenalin in vials containing one grain of the crystals; this form of the drug is not, however, in much demand for therapeutic purposes. The preparation usually employed is Adrenalin Chloride Solution, 1:1000, containing one part of Adrenalin Chloride in 1000 parts of physiologic or normal salt solution, with 0.5 per cent. chloretone.
