Johnstown is situated in the Conemaugh Valley in the western part of Pennsylvania, a few miles distant from Harrisburg, the State Capital. This valley is a picturesque one, overlooked by towering up hills which are quite numerous on either side of the river, and extend away back over the moors, to be shorn of their sylvan splendors, their conical slopes exhibiting to the artful eye a garb of beauty dressed by nature's own nimble fingers, selecting all of the different hues in her bright cestus. But the industrious farmer compensated the scene by the growing of the different cereals which bowed their golden heads to the wandering winds, giving a wavy surface to the fields of grain, which were a beautiful sight to behold. Nature seemed to lavish her beauties on the surroundings of Johnstown, making the people who were honestly engaged in the various avocations of life enjoy their own existence and the happiness of all others. Such was life in Johnstown in its palmy days when there was prevalent an ennobling and exalting spirit among her people.
