Not illustrated. 1916 Excerpt: . . . unprecedented high prices are, in fact, due to the attitude of some officials who seem unwilling to permit the trade to procure good therapeutic preparations at reasonable prices under any name whatever, to replace many chemicals that have disappeared from the market or are available only at prohibitive figures. The war abroad of course is held responsible. This condition is referred to in the recent issue of the Journal of the American Medical Association, which states that both national and state prosecutions are being brought to suppress some substitutes for one chemical preparation which, it is mentioned, is now obtainable. This together with other facts seems to show that it is the intention of certain officials to prosecute or persecute any one who uses the mails to procure standard and reliable supplies for any preparation which is desired to put on the market when it would...
