Excerpt: .2252, -- All chemical action consists in the more intimate union of particles of matter previously brought into the nearest possible contact by mixture; or in the separation of those that may have previously been attached to each other. 2263, -- No chemical action can ensue where the materials are not brought into the nearest possible contact. Let us take the familiar instance of the combustion of a number of grains of gunpowder. We place them together, in contact, and on approaching a body of the due temperature for ignition, combustion ensues; and the intervals of time occupied by the transmission of heat, from grain to grain, being inappreciable by our senses, the combustion has the effect of being simultaneous. But let us alter the arrangement or collocation of the several grains. Let them be placed consecutively in the nature of a train, so as to establish certain distances between them. Under this arrangement, combustion will no longer be simultaneous, and an appreciable interval will occur between the combustion of the several grains. Let us further suppose, that, at some part of the series, the distance between some of the grains was greater than mutual action or influence demanded. In that case we cannot doubt that the interruption created by such distances would stop the continuousness of the combustion, and that the grains thus separated would escape combustion. This illustration, it is to be observed, is without reference to chemical action between the atoms or...
